SPC Plainview Center announces new classes for spring

PLAINVIEW CENTER – Starting in spring of 2009, the South Plains College Plainview Center will offer two programs, the Applied Rehabilitation Psychology Program and the Child Development Program.

The intent of the Applied Rehabilitation Psychology Program is to provide students with theoretical and practical application in the areas of mental health, mental retardation, substance abuse and physical disabilities.

The Child Development Program is designed to provide students with the same theoretical knowledge, as well as experience which will enable them to work within the field of child development.

The programs both offer a two year Associate of Applied Science Degree that is designed to provide the student with a strong academic and clinical foundation in the fields of human services and child development.

For individuals interested in the Applied Rehabilitation Psychology Program, contact Mollie McCook-Melton, program coordinator, at 806-716-4652 or mmelton@southplainscollege.edu.

If interested in the Child Development Program, contact Johnanne Reynolds, program coordinator, at 806-716-4646 or at jreynolds@southplainscollege.edu
